Electives (9 credits)

One elective must be a Public History course [all currently-enrolled graduate students are exempt]. This will allow you to think intentionally about how you would like to disseminate your work. With proper planning, coursework in electives may count towards a second certificate. You should use your electives to explore other fields and identify a second field advisor for your capstone project. Elective courses are opportunities to explore secondary thematic or geographical fields that intersect with major fields and capstone projects.

Have you selected a second advisor for your second field in your capstone project? Yes ___ No ___

* If no, select a second field advisor for your capstone while you are completing your electives.

* If yes: Second Field Advisor: _____ Second Field: _____

Capstone Options (6 credits):

Select one of the two options below. Credits may be distributed over multiple semesters as the student prefers. Students must complete the Research Seminar before starting the Capstone. Semester One consists of preliminary research: identifying historiographical trends and locating sources for your project. At the end of the semester students will prepare and present a Research Prospectus to their committee. In the second semester, students will carry out their research and writing, and will defend their theses or curriculum projects at the end of the process.
