V. Composing Conclusions

Suppose you created a project on propaganda in World War I. Using the primary source and your answers from the analysis section, as well as the following thesis, compose a clear and concise conclusion to your project.

Thesis: During World War I, the United States used propaganda widely to generate support for their involvement in the war effort, a strategy that proved successful. The use of propaganda would evolve and expand during World War II, and eventually come to influence how the United States government generates support for international conflict and relations today.

2. Imagine that you are writing a paper on the American Revolution. Using the brief summary below, write an annotation for your bibliographic entry.

“America’s beloved and distinguished historian presents, in a book of breathtaking excitement, drama, and narrative force, the stirring story of the year of our nation’s birth, 1776, interweaving, on both sides of the Atlantic, the actions and decisions that led Great Britain to undertake a war against her rebellious colonial subjects and that placed America’s survival in the hands of George Washington. In this masterful book, David McCullough tells the intensely human story of those who marched with General George Washington in the year of the Declaration of Independence—when the whole American cause was riding on their success, without which all hope for independence would have been dashed and the noble ideals of the Declaration would have amounted to little more than words on paper.”
