Understanding Behavior, Groups, and Institutions Through Studying... Sociology

College of Liberal Arts and Sciences

The Department of Sociology at the University of Colorado Denver offers students a multifaceted learning experience that provides an understanding of how individuals and institutions interact to shape our social world. By conducting empirical and theoretical research, faculty members aim to advance and expand sociological knowledge, and use sociological theory and research findings to understand social problems and offer potential solutions. The focal areas of research for CU Denver faculty include family sociology, health, and criminology/law. In addition to offering coursework in these areas, courses are offered in a variety of subfields, including race and ethnicity, urban sociology, medical Sociology, and social psychology. Several of the department courses fulfill requirements of CU Denver’s core undergraduate curriculum.

Learn about the study of social life, social change, and the social causes and consequences of human behavior.

Studying sociology opens doors to many careers. Some sociologists work in social services, counseling, and research. Graduates use their degrees to work as directors of research, policy analysts, consultants, and human resource managers. Still others work as survey researchers, statisticians, urban planners, community developers, criminologists, or demographers. For those completing advanced study in sociology, college teaching is an option. College and university positions also include advising students, conducting studies, and publishing research. Overall, there is growing appreciation for sociology’s contribution to interdisciplinary analysis and action.
The Bachelor of Arts in Sociology requires a total of 120 credits, including 32 credits earned in sociology. In addition to required sociology courses, CU Denver has a set of core university requirements for all undergraduates. These include courses in the humanities, social sciences, behavioral sciences, and natural/physical sciences. CU Denver also requires that students demonstrate competency in mathematics and writing, either through testing or coursework. Details on these requirements are available from the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences. For more information, please visit: http://clas.ucdenver.edu/advising

The Sociology core consists of the following courses, which must be completed with a grade of “C-” or better in each individual course.

Elective Courses

Students also choose a minimum of 12 credits of elective courses from the sociology department. Elective courses must be completed with a minimum of a “C-” in each course. F’s will not be averaged in. 3 of these elective credits must be at the 4000 level.

Sociology Honors

Students who major in sociology have the option of graduating with sociology honors. The Department offers three levels of honors with the BA degree: departmental honors (cum laude), high departmental honors (magna cum laude), and highest departmental honors (summa cum laude). To earn departmental honors, students must complete two semesters of Directed Research (SOCY 4880) supervised by a faculty member. Prior to beginning SOCY 4880, students are required to take Understanding the Social World (1001), Qualitative Methods (3119), and Quantitative Methods & Analysis (3115), and earn a “B” or higher in each of these courses. Occasionally, students may obtain special permission from their faculty supervisor to begin Directed Research before taking all of the courses listed above.
A sociology minor is earned by completing a minimum of 15 credits in sociology with a grade of “C-” or better. Nine (9) of these credits must be earned from CU Denver. Six (6) of these credits must be upper division (3000 or 4000 level).

Criminology

Criminology is the field of study dedicated to understanding crime as a social phenomenon. Criminologists study the social construction of laws, nature and causes of crime, reactions to the breaking of laws, and the prevention, control and treatment of crime. The Department of Sociology’s Criminology Certificate offers an essential foundation for students pursuing careers in criminal justice, victim and community services, criminal law, and non-profit organizations in local and international contexts. The certificate also prepares interested students for law school and graduate programs in sociology and criminology.

Sociology of Health and Medicine

Medical sociology is a subfield devoted to the study of population health, health care systems and policy, and the social dimensions of illness and healing. Medical sociologists study the causes of health inequalities, social constructions of health and illness, origins of medical authority, doctor-patient relationships, community influences on health, and the social forces that affect policy. The Sociology Department’s Sociology of Health and Medicine Certificate provides training in the core research methodologies and theories of medical sociology, examining individual experience, institutional structures, laws and policies that affect health, and broader systems of inequality that lead to unequal rates of illness and access to care. This certificate provides depth of training in these areas and is ideal for students interested in graduate-level study and social research on health and medicine, as well as those interested in careers in public health, health care services, and non-profit organizations.

Families and Social Welfare

This certificate provides students a foundation for understanding the complex role of families and family members at multiple levels, as well as the social systems and organizations responsible for supporting families and individuals. The content and methods courses will prepare students for direct service positions working with individuals and families (e.g., human and social services), or research, policy or advocacy positions addressing family issues (e.g., housing, violence and abuse, parenting, social welfare). Students earning the certificate also will be well-positioned to pursue advanced degrees in social work, public health, counseling, law, sociology, or related disciplines.
Student Research

Students in The Department of Sociology at CU Denver have the opportunity to participate in research projects with faculty members, which provide opportunities for students to:

> Contribute to the creation of new knowledge
> Sharpen critical and analytical thinking skills
> Enhance confidence
> Complement and extend classroom learning
> Prepare for graduate-level study or career
> Develop and explore interests
> Present work at professional conferences

Sociology Internships

The Department of Sociology strongly encourages internships for all students. Internships include (but are not limited to) working for non-profit organizations, safe houses, homeless shelters, public schools, government agencies, and legal offices. Students completing internships engage in a variety of activities such as providing art therapy for abused children, teaching English to Hispanic immigrants, helping underrepresented groups with health care access, organizing and running focus groups, and assisting with food collection and distribution.

The Experiential Learning Center (ELC) is now using the program Handshake to help students register for internships. If you are interested in participating in an internship, you should complete your profile on Handshake (http://www.ucdenver.edu/elm). Ideally, this should be completed one semester prior to the semester you want to start your internship.

Students must also attend an Internship Workshop at the Experiential Learning Center in the Tivoli. This is where you will learn about the process for finding an internship that matches your interests and major. You will also learn more about how to utilize Handshake and other resources to search and apply for available internships. You can register for a workshop by clicking on “Events” in Handshake (left navigation bar).

Once you’ve completed the steps above, you may begin applying for internships through Handshake, other websites, and your network of contacts. Please contact the ELC for assistance at any point during this process. Call 303-315-7258 or email the Experiential Learning Center at Experiential.LearningCenter@ucdenver.edu. You must also have a faculty sponsor from the Department of Sociology to oversee your internship.
