

Chicago Manual of Style, 16th Edition [CMOS]

The Chicago Manual of Style (CMOS) offers several citation and documentation styles. This handout presents the CMOS Notes-Bibliography (N-B) system. The N-B system requires either footnotes OR endnotes, in addition to a bibliography at the end of the paper.

Footnotes: located on the same page as the cited text Endnotes: located at the end of the paper but before the bibliography

In-text note numbers are set as superscript without a period in the main body of the paper, usually after punctuation and the closing parenthesis. Corresponding note numbers at the bottom of the page are full-size numbers followed by a period in the note section itself.

Superscript: ¹²³ Full size: 1. 2. 3.

The first line of the note is indented half an inch. Subsequent lines are flush left with the standard 1-inch margin. The entire document should be double-spaced, including the bibliography.

When citing in Chicago style, it is important to recognize that footnotes and endnotes follow a specific pattern:

Initial citation: The first time you cite a source, your footnote or endnote should contain elements such as author, title, date of publication, and page numbers.

Short form citation: Once you've cited a source, all subsequent citations follow a basic short form meant to reduce bulky documentation. Short form citations contain the author's last name, a shortened main title (if more than four words), and page number(s).

In addition to initial and short form citations, Chicago permits the use of Ibid. Ibid. allows you to refer to a single work cited in the preceding note. This eliminates repetition when citing the same source multiple times in a row. However, if the preceding note contains more than one citation, then Ibid. cannot be used because it is unclear which source is being repeated.

The following example illustrates a sequence of three footnotes that cite the same source:

5. Joseph E. Stiglitz, Globalization and Its Discontents (New York: W.W. Norton & Company, 2003), 151.

6. Stiglitz, Globalization and Its Discontents, 160.

7. Ibid., 189.

Bibliography:

The bibliography appears at the end of a paper, but before an index, in a separate section. In the bibliography, list all sources alphabetically by author's last name. The first line of each citation is flush with the left margin; all subsequent lines are indented half an inch (a hanging indent). Include all cited books, articles, electronic sources, and other relevant references. However, bibliographies typically do not include personal communications such as lectures, emails, interviews, etc.
